Download Ubuntu | Firefox 14 [Community Edition]. two-strike shoplifting: more than 99.9% of the time that defendants, who have engaged in the five-strike activity, will be convicted of the greater offense. A defendant who chooses to reject a plea offer involving a two-strike shoplifting offer is guilty as charged in that case, but, in almost all of these cases, will spend a much shorter time in jail than a defendant who has rejected a plea offer of either a one- or three-strike shoplifting. The trial court's determination not to impose a five-year minimum sentence in the plaintiff's case has no bearing on whether or not the plaintiff was offered a proper plea bargain, but, instead, reflects the trial court's view that the minimum sentence should be less than or equal to the maximum, which is what occurred in the above-discussed cases when defendants were convicted of both one- and three-strike shoplifting. Further, the plaintiff has failed to present any evidence of the number of defendants who have been granted favorable plea agreements under the three-strike provision. The defendants have made inquiries of the court on the issue, and the court cannot answer these inquiries because the court has not kept track of such cases. On the facts presented, the plaintiff has failed to establish that the strike law is not well suited to the legitimate needs of the criminal justice system. The next issue to be addressed is the issue of whether the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint support the conclusion that this case comes within the purview of the separation of powers doctrine. The court believes that the allegations do not support such a conclusion. All of the plaintiff's arguments stem from the fact that the three-strike provision of the statute is not being applied on its face. The plaintiff argues that 6d1f23a050
