Inventory data is one of the most important areas in a business, and a major reason for why our business is based upon inventory. If you're trying to run a business, you're trying to make money, and you can't if your inventory is inaccurate, says Daniel Stobaugh, vice president of IDR at First Florida Bank. Some businesses that have been around for 100 years have survived because they've accumulated a great deal of inventory, and there's a chance that a competitor could swoop in and take away some of those lucrative customers. The data is critical and the data should be accurate. Accounting firms also have to worry about their reputation. How can they convince clients to move their data to them? The answer is complicated. Many of the audits were offered online, which made them exceedingly costly. To the contrary, Little's work is freely available. It is not as if he has to request money from anyone to send out his book or his personal records. Is anyone actually paying for this service?

Additionally, Little actually did a pretty good job of exposing his findings and their significance. Many of his findings were fairly obvious. I would not have posted the names of those accounting firms he mentioned. Most of Little's employers, when contacted, responded favorably and said he did a good job. Some said they now used his audit as a form of self-evaluation, and could find a specific point in time where they needed to upgrade their practices. Most of the firms mentioned by Little over the last two years have made at least some upgrades in response to his audits. Many of the firms interviewed, however, did not specifically focus on their older procedures. The biggest focus was on their general approach, and on what they learned about their systems. At the same time, it makes sense that firms want to defend their reputation, and that they would focus on the trustworthiness of their systems and practices.

eTRUST relies on reporting by data collectors. Each data collector reports to eTRUST whether it uses cookies or whether it is subject to a cookie-free mode, whether it uses banners or beacons, and whether it transfers data to third parties. A clear statement and description of information practices helps consumers to understand that their information is used only for the purposes of the eTRUST program and for those purposes only, and that it cannot be used for other purposes without their consent. If a data collector that collects information for a partner program, e.g. to sell advertisements, transfers the information to its partner, then that partner's information practices must be disclosed. A data collector's use of statistics and aggregated data also must be disclosed. A data collector could update its privacy statement when it realizes that information it had previously thought to be anonymous is in fact associated with a person. A new data collector that operates an opt-in system could accurately report the kinds of information it collects. A Web site could also use an opt-in system to report individualized cookie data to its visitors. New Web sites have the opportunity to issue novel policies about the use of this new personal information, the types of information it collects and the purposes for which it uses it. The accuracy of stock availability on which warehouse receipts are issued determine the quality of data that logistics managers can build on to refine their forecasts and improve their logistics planning. Accurate information about inventory can only be achieved if a business is able to collect and record information on every single unit of goods in its inventory. If you dont have the data, you cant adjust your models to reflect what you think the data should be. No amount of data modeling will be able to achieve true accuracy if the data dont exist, and it doesnt. 5ec8ef588b
